Australia Debates Tougher Online Safety Laws and Rights to Sue Tech Giants

Proposed digital duty of care laws face parliamentary scrutiny as the Greens demand provisions allowing Australians to sue social media companies for online harm.

- The legislation would require social media companies to protect minors from harmful online material including pornography and bullying. [bordermail.com.au][dailyliberal.com.au]

  > “put the onus on social media companies to ensure under-18s aren't exposed to harmful content”

- The Greens are pushing to allow individuals to sue big tech companies directly for damages caused by online content. [bordermail.com.au]

  > “give people safe legal pathways to get compensation from tech companies if they were harmed by online content.”

- Opposition communications spokeswoman Sarah Henderson opposed the legislation as an infringement on free expression. [bordermail.com.au]

  > “This is an attack on free speech, full and centre,”

- Independent crossbenchers have backed the proposed legislation as a long-overdue safety measure. [bordermail.com.au]

  > “It is essential that we put guardrails around the online environment to make sure there's a safe space,”

North Carolina's Revolutionary Radicals and the Inevitability of Political Factions

Political differences are natural and inevitable, as demonstrated by the split between conservatives and radicals during North Carolina's Fifth Provincial Congress.

- Political factions are a natural result of human freedom and differing opinions rather than purely artificial divisions.

  [thedigitalcourier.com]

  > ""As long as the reason of man continues fallible, and he is at liberty to exercise it, different opinions will be formed,""

- Modern social science studies utilizing personality assessments suggest correlations between certain traits and political preferences.

  [thedigitalcourier.com]

  > "multiple studies have found that higher scores on Conscientiousness and Extraversion tend to correlate with right-leaning views"

- Prominent conservative leader Samuel Johnston was defeated by radical voters 250 years ago this week for the Fifth Congress.

  [thedigitalcourier.com]

  > "250 years ago this week, voters in most counties and municipalities chose radicals, not conservatives, to represent them"

- Richard Caswell ultimately presided over the Fifth

Congress and became the first governor of the independent state.

[thedigitalcourier.com]

> "It would be another Patriot, Richard Caswell, who presided over the Fifth Congress — and Caswell, not Johnston, who became the first governor"
